The less conventional fourth movement, marked andante, non prestissimo a charming and stately gavotte with elegant variations for the two violins. Bravo Len and Gary. Largo, e staccato - iv.

They were described in detail by the contemporary musicologist and commentator

The movement divides into four parts: The siciliana is similar in style to those Handel wrote for his operas, always marking moments of tragic pathos; one celebrated example is the soprano-alto duet Son nata a lagrimar for Sesto op. 6 Cornelia at the end of Act I of Giulio Cesare.

Beneath them, the bass part moves steadily in quavers, with extra harmony provided by the violins. There are no questions. The last movement, an allegro in A minor, is a radical reworking of a soprano aria that Handel was preparing for his penultimate opera Imeneo.
