The Roman forum is located in between the Palatine hill and Capitoline hill in the center of Rome. By ignoring the several layers of history that constitute rich archaeological sites, such as a constantly occupied area like Rome. I think people more immediately interested in the Forum as an archaeological site should read .

This name is still used in modern English, but generally the structure is better. The statue itself was largely forgotten and only its base survives, situated between the Colosseum and the nearby Temple of Venus and Roma. The only bits I was particularly interested were about the Temple of Vesta and the shrine to Juno. Leave a Reply Cancel reply Your email address will not be published.
