The Physics of Sorrow Jeremias Gotthilf: The book is a diary of sorts, without the "Dear diary" sentences. It is a remarkable book. First published in Germany, it was followed very quickly by Die Wahlverwandtschaften Johann Wolfgang von Goethe: Doris is a young, good looking, provincial German of working extraction, a combination that has taught her that if she is to live up to the dreams of glamour and comfort that the mass-media imparted her, she cannot be too stingy with her attentions. Despite the less than rosy picture it draws for Doris, the story is written in a deceptively light-hearted style, using the regional and working class colloquial language of her character with some Berliner phraseology and idioms thrown in.
