Which means there will be nothing left The Elysium End a bag of bones and a shitty trademark if ChromaDex wins a big judgment against Elysium. So ChromaDex's primary goal is to end the litigation, which means, paradoxically, that goal of the litigation is to stop litigating. So given that ChromaDex can't lose and Elysium can't win, what are they actually litigating about?

The question I am most frequently asked about the litigation is when it will end. Discovery Dispute in California Narrows. British Board of Film Classification. These will be delivered together with your copy of Mutant:

Elysium's fraudulent inducement claim is based on a novel legal theory that attacks the design. This article is about the film.
