Other systems - religion, nationalism, paranoid ideation, or art - are based on personal experiences faith, inspiration, paranoia. Would they have become aware that they are mere intertwined components of a larger whole? After all, if all sentient beings were to perish in a horrible calamity, the Sun would still be there, revolving as it has done from time immemorial.

But does God exist outside people's minds? Modal ontological arguments even postulate as a premise that God is a necessary being and use that very assumption as a building block in proving that He exists!

The locus of God's hypothesized existence is, clearly and exclusively, in the world. They are necessary entities because without them the World as we know and perceive it would not exist.
